

The Strength of Bank of America

Bank of America Corporation's financial power

- In the second quarter of 2012, Bank of America Corporation reported net income of $2.5 billion, or $0.19 per diluted share, compared with a net loss of $8.8 billion for the same period a year ago and net income of $653 million in the first quarter of 2012.
- In addition to solid contributions from the company's wealth management and corporate and commercial banking businesses, the improvement from the year-ago quarter was driven by higher mortgage banking income, reflecting lower provisions for representations and warranties, the absence of a goodwill impairment charge and improved credit quality across most major portfolios. This was partially offset by lower net interest income from the continued low-rate environment and lower loan levels.
- One measure of Bank of America's strength is what is called "time to required funding" – which refers to the number of months Bank of America Corporation, the parent company, can meet its unsecured contractual obligations as they come due, using only its global excess liquidity sources and without issuing any new debt or accessing additional liquidity sources. Its time to required funding, as of the end of the second quarter of 2012, was 37 months.
- The company is focused on building capital and maintaining strong liquidity mainly through retained earnings and implementing other capital-related initiatives. At the end of the second quarter of 2012, Bank of America had Tier 1 common capital of $134 billion under Basel I and a record Tier 1 common capital ratio of 11.24%. Over the last 12 months, Bank of America has increased its Tier 1 common capital ratio by 301 basis points, representing the biggest year-over-year increase of the four major U.S. banks.

A market-leading position

- As one of the world's largest financial institutions, Bank of America serves approximately 56 million consumers and small businesses around the world, doing business with one out of every two households in the U.S. It has approximately 5,594 banking centers and approximately 16,220 ATMs.
